Risky Code

One of the risky features that we implemented was integrating with Facebook to allow the user to sign up for our site, as well as saving the Facebook user's profile picture and email address. It is risky because we had to learn an external API which none of us had worked with before. We now have the knowledge to learn how to post a question to a user's time-line using the Facebook API.

The other risky feature was storing pictures that a user uploads when they sign up. We had to figure out how to save the file to the server, as well as make a reference to the picture in the database. We figured out how to display the picture in the profile page. Profile pictures will be used a lot on our website so it was good to figure out how pictures are stored.
